Entry 10

I submitted my lab report draft, which was more of an outline, and I was able to review a peer's report. Having read my peers report, I was able to understand the importance of the separation of each section. I saw that this was very important when changing subjects and when distinguishing pieces of information that create the whole report. I conducted a survey on 10 of my peers to see how distance learning influenced them and then I converted the information into a simple table. I also conducted research on the topic and came to the conclusion that distance learning influences people differently as those that can teach themselves and manage time well tend to do better. In the small sample size that I surveyed, I found that people did better online and felt more motivated online.
